Many Come on Excursions From Charlottesville, Norfolk and Near-by Country.

SIGHT-SEERS IN THE CAPITOL

Hundreds Take Advantage of Excursion Rates to Visit This City.

As the Mecca of the holiday crowds after the lore of ancient Richmond yesterday the lore of ancient Richmond yesterday stood out in bold relief, for there were hundreds of the eagered-eyed who had come to Join in the celebration of the great religious holiday. The city was filled wantourless from all the country-side and from neighboring cities. There were large excursions from Charlottesville and Norfolk and all the intervening points; and by moon the city was fill with the day's immigrants. They wandered from one point of historic interest to another, paying especial interest to the City Hall and the capitol buildings, and to the Governor's mansion.

For the noonday lunch the most of the brown-cheeked lassles and lads and the rubleund farmers and their motherly housewives gathered in the Capitol Square, where they alternately fed themselves and the playful squirrels, who seemed folly alive to the importance of the occasion from the internal point of view and accordingly regaled themselves with mirely speed and pleasure.

To the rustles, some of whom had visited the capital for the first time the day was one of unalloyed pleasure and of unsurpassed delights. The street cars were thronged on every trip; for the visitors wished to see as much of the city as could possibly be acomplished in one day's journey; and there was hardly a spot in all the city that had not been trod during the course of the day by some foot more used to the clods than the unyleiding pavement.

It was a happy, jolly crowd.
The rustles had come to visit their knowing relatives of the city, who appeared only too glad to show them the sights of the town and the subtle, alluring attractions of the theatres. The crowds were not due wholly, by any means, to the large number of tourists, for many business houses gave holiday to their employes, whose numbers swelled the throngs to unusual proportions. Though many spent the day in the day, there were likewise many who made excursions into the countryside nearby, where early spring picnics were arranged for those who love the green and the song of birds more than the noise and hum of city life.

Besides the nearby excursions, there was a large excursion to Washington over the Richmond, Fredericksburg and Potomac Raliroad on the train popularly known as "Cupid's Limited." There were fully five hundred who took this easy and cheap means of visiting the United States capital. Though this was the ostensible reason, many went as members of that grand army, who journey annually to plight their troth in the nation's Greini Green.

WESTMORELAND CLUB AND COMMONWEALTH

Mr. Barney Gilmore, an Irish actor, with an Irish Jaunting car, an Irish harn, an Irish brogue, with Irish flags adorning the theatre and the two gallery boxes adorned with pretty Irish girls, played "A Rockty Road to Dublin," an Irish play, in which Irish songs were interspersed to a large audience, partly Irish, at the Bljou last night.

"It was a great night for old Ireland, for the hero from the Emerald Isle, clad in green velvet, after suffering shame through two acts for the golden haired girl (also appareled in green velvet), he loved, finally, in the third act, routed the English villain, inherited an opulent American britune, and breathing defiance to the worl at large, clasped the aforesald golden haired lady to his chest as the final curtain fell.

The best of the play are the scenes between an American traveler, Mr. William Masterson, from the wild and woolly West, and a Boston widow, also on pleasure bent,

Mr. Frank Lavarnie, who did the woolly Westerner, was far and away the best of the company, all of whom received generous applause, mingled with a number of violent "hisses" for the wicked British villain, who finally received his just rewards along with a red haired young lady, whom he did not seem to want.
